

Interactive session

Alessia Musumarra,
EU CAP Network

Why are we doing this exercise?

- Future farmers will play a crucial role in shaping the future of EU agriculture.
- They will face a landscape where resilience, adaptability, and innovation are key.
- Your input into policy discussions is vital for ensuring the right support is available for your evolving needs.

Rethinking Generational Renewal: from quantity to quality

- Rather than focusing solely on numbers of new farmers, we must ask: What kinds of farmers do we need for the future?
- A diverse array of farmers is key to resilience and sustainability.

How it will work:

- You are going to be divided into 5 groups (check your badge)
- The interactive session will be divided into three rounds:
 1. In the first round, you'll discuss key trends and challenges that might impact future farmers.
 2. In the second round (after the lunch break and the warm-up activity), each of the five groups will focus on how a specific farmer profile could evolve over the next 10 years, considering those trends and challenges.
 3. In the final round at 15:30, we will come together in a plenary session where each group will present their findings.

Engaging in today dialogue

Today's discussion aims to reflect on a new generation of farmers equipped to face the challenges and opportunities of the future.

Together, we will explore different future farming profiles and how key trends will affect their farming journey.

The second TG meeting will then focus on how we can ensure policies adapt to various emerging farming models and what support young farmers will need in this evolving context.

Thank you!
